Identity management is a big business most everywhere but Estonia and India. Estonia's country leadership implemented what is now much more than a national ID card. It is a digital access card for all secure e-services; health insurance, proof of ID for computers or banking services, digital signature and a voting tool. Each card has a chip with a public-private key pair.

A huge population with no identity - essentially invisible. India has taken a leap in the implementation of an iris scan, digital fingerprints, a digital photo and text-based data for every resident. These elements together are the Unique Identification project (Aadhaar) registering 10 million people a day in India with over 1 billion together registered in the largest biometric database in the world. India will see transformation across a country that will be able to move quickly toward growth due to transparency provided by an authentic verifiable identify.
