

College of Technology now Purdue Polytechnic Institute

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. - The Purdue University Board of Trustees on Friday, May 15th approved renaming the College of Technology to the Purdue Polytechnic Institute to better reflect its changing and expanded mission.

Gary Bertoline, dean of the Purdue Polytechnic Institute, said the curricular and cultural transformation of the college warrants a new name and frame of reference.

"The Purdue Polytechnic Institute provides a 21st century poly-technical education that will prepare students with skills, knowledge and experiences required by business and industry today and in decades to come," he said. "It incorporates innovative learning environments, integrates humanities with technical studies in a learn-by-doing atmosphere, and offers new options for majors and for earning a degree. As we work to address the needs of today's economy, we are redefining the polytechnic experience."
